

Courtesy of Rag & Bone

Style

The anti-resort, resort show

Resort is not always what you expect!

BY EMMA O'BRIEN

November 2, 2022

Rag & Bone had their ideas on what they thought for their Men's Resort catwalk show 2023. Marcus Wainwright even shot some looks himself he wouldn't dare say "resort." Rag & Bone is an American fashion brand that is originally from Britain and has remained popular in both areas.

Courtesy of Rag & Bone

All the looks are extremely ready-to-wear looks that would be great transitional outfits from fall to winter. Since 2002 Rag & Bone has been able to remain constant with its designs. Fashion week is a time for all things art and beauty to be poured on a runway to see which designers cause the biggest buzz. Typically creating unique and exciting photos, Wainwright took a more to-the-point approach. It has been reported by Vouge Runway "You won't hear the word "resort" come out of Marcus Wainwright's mouth." This stays true throughout their Mne's resort images. This collection has an early '90s touch to it with high-rise trousers, lots of collars, and layers. At first glance, this collection looks like a fall/winter collection with a black, gray, and navy color scheme. One interesting approach is the brand chose the same male model for all their online images. This could be an attempt at creating consistency throughout the looks. In addition, the model has a buzzed head, and he is also standing in front of a very plain background of a sheet metal wall that allows for the garments to pop off the wall. All the bottoms are simple as being one color and some have two-inch cuffs at the bottom that give the '70s feel.

Courtesy of Rag & Bone

Most under shirts are also very neutral and the main garment that jumps out at the viewer are the jackets. These are fashion forwards jackets, not winter coats but more of a fall weather jacket. This line does not include any suits but has a more causal day-to-day look. There is a wide variety of tastes that all go well together in this collection. Including plaid, sunglasses both round and aviators, leather jackets, khaki style pants and cuffed dark blue jeans. With this wide variety of fabrics there is something in this collection for everyone. These looks could be dressed up for the office or also dressed down for a more causal day of activities. Rag & Bone has done it again and we can't wait to see what they do next.

Courtesy of Rag & Bone

Courtesy of Rag & Bone

SUBSCRIBE NOW